

The glass water bowl for restructured water

Your dog will enjoy drinking from a glass bowl...

Glass is a natural material that doesn't leach harmful substances into the water.

Structured water will become the standard...

Doggy Flaska structures water via the renowned and unique TPS2 process.

It is produced in accordance with geomancy and feng shui principles*.

You will realise that even you enjoy the Doggy Flaska...

The bowl comes with a heavy stand which cannot be moved or spilled by your dog. Its aesthetically pleasing design makes it more than a utility as it will be a pleasing sight in your home or doghouse. Cleaning the bowl is simple and quick.

Doggy Flaska

The product is composed of two parts: the Doggy Flaska glass bowl and a special stand. The quality glass bowl is produced by the renowned Slovenian glassworks Steklarna Hrastnik. Products are engraved with a special geomancy symbol and lot number. Similarly to the original Flaska, Doggy Flaska then undergoes the TPS2 process used in the integration of specific vibrations*.

Hello!

I am glad that you decided to get your very own Doggy Flaska, which is more than just a water bowl for pets. The revolutionary Doggy Flaska is a blend of modern materials and ancient wisdom. To further develop the product, your opinion on the use is very important to us, because dogs have different characters and accept the bowl in their own way.

We would be grateful if you could send us your experience via e-mail to water@flaska.eu. We would also be glad to see some photos of your pet drinking water from the Doggy Flaska.

The stand is made from a state-of-the-art mineral material. In the course of production, the stand is treated via TPS2. This will permanently embed vibrations directly into the product. Each stand is hand-made and unique because of the special way of painting. This is also the reason why there are minor variations in the shades of colour and the patterns.

The stand is also engraved with a zoogram designed specifically for dogs. It was created by geomancer Robi Lavin from Sežana.

The stand is shaped like an egg. However, the egg which was the inspiration for the Doggy Flaska stand is not just any ordinary egg – it was devised by Walter Schauburger! It is based on the mathematical ratio of octaves in music, making the product's design harmonic.

The water bowl in a room

People have always been dependent on water. A cave could never have been called home if it weren't close to a water source. Furthermore, every noteworthy civilisation would originate from an area abundant in water while many other disappeared due to the lack thereof. Even today, every major thriving city is located along a river. The modern man seeks out water. That is why camping sites along lakes and rivers are always full, and spas are gaining in popularity. Embedded deep in our historic memory, water represents the source of life and freedom.

It is therefore easily understandable why water is also an integral element of our homes. Maybe it is represented by a painting, or maybe it fills the fish tank, or even the fountain in the front yard. The motif of water in our residences is also represented by the Doggy Flaska dog water bowl. Doggy Flaska is aesthetically appealing, and furthermore, the bowl and the water transmit good energy* throughout the house.

Water for your dog

The energy impact Doggy Flaska is important, though its primary function is even more significant. Along with good-quality food and plenty of exercise, water is most definitely the key factor contributing to the health and well-being of man's best friend.

A dog's water bowl should be refilled at least once or better yet twice daily. This way, our boundlessly loyal and loving friends will be provided the necessary fresh and pure water, guaranteeing health and longevity.

On structured water*

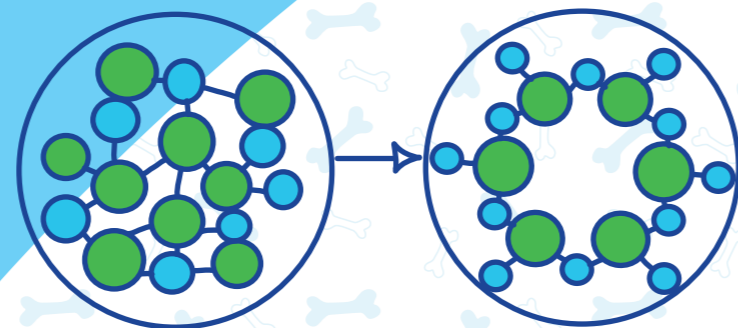

Structured water is quite unusual. It is reminiscent of the Indian story of the blind men and the elephant, a tale where the blind man would try to find out what the elephant looks like. The first would touch the elephant's leg and describe it as a pillar. The second touched its tail and compared it to a rope. The third blind man discovered that the trunk was reminiscent of a tree branch, and the fourth that the ear was like a hand fan. The fifth did not agree and insisted that the elephant felt like a wall. The sixth blind man compared the elephant's tusks to a solid pipe.

From the generally established scientific point-of-view, there is no such thing as structured water, however a part of the scientific community provided the evidence of this unique phenomenon. The strawberry grower claims that structured water enhances yield while alternative science gurus treat water as a living being. So, which point of view is correct?

The exact definition of water structure cannot be classified traditionally. When observing water we discovered that the different structures of water – even if the chemical composition is exactly the same – have a varying impact on living creatures. Therefore, we decided to create a bowl that structures water specifically for dogs and their needs.

Of course, the information here differ from those used in cultivating strawberries as well as those in the Flaska. In practice, we found that the Doggy Flaska also attract some cats. Apparently, dogs and cats are more alike than we think.

The story of strawberries, Flaska and other stuff...

I started growing strawberries in 1993. In 2003, when I first heard of the programming procedure which supposedly changes the structure of the water I immediately decided to put it to the test. In the past, I mainly dealt with soil, and I never gave water a second thought, regardless of the fact that fruit is composed of as much as 89% water.

The results were so extraordinary I still remember the day when I literally could not catch my breath thinking of the potential of this relatively unknown process. After all, water is everywhere! In the next six years, I examined the influence of structured water on strawberries under various conditions. I was astonished by the results again and again. Consequently, I became convinced that water restructuring was not a matter of belief, but instead a process that really works. I was transformed from a sceptic into a proponent of this technology.

It is interesting to note that the water restructuring principle is relatively unknown, despite having been around for at the least 80 years thanks to Victor Schauberger. I tried to find a way to apply this process to an everyday object. After a year and a half, I succeeded in developing the perfect product: the reusable water bottle Flaska. After 16 years, I bid the strawberries farewell and concentrated entirely on the Flaska.

In November 2009, a test lot was made. It was received extremely well by the general public, so we started with mass production. Now, after five years, more than 150,000 people already use the Flaska. They have given us heaps of positive feedback, while many even declared that their pets prefer water from Flaska to regular tap water.

Our own dog Rika at the time already drank from a glass bowl, though we decided not to start developing any new products at the time. We were simply too preoccupied with the bottles. In the spring of 2014, our dear friend Silvia de Krassny suggested that this would be the perfect time to release a new product – a glass bowl for dogs.

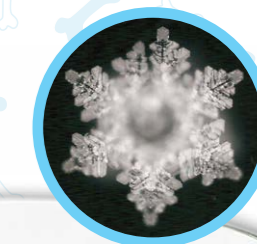

Its development lasted long but the end result is great. We wish your pets lots of good water!
